

Introducing Skills Builder Homezone

Helping parents and carers to build their child's essential skills at home.

Why do children need to build their essential skills?

Research shows that building essential skills supports:

Social and emotional wellbeing

Learning and academic outcomes

Careers and opportunities

Access family activities at home to build essential skills

Try a range of suggested online and offline activities, including weekly skill challenges, to begin building your child's essential skills.

Enjoy building skills at a time and pace to suit your family

Spend the amount of time to best suit you and your child, perhaps completing one section at a time. You can always come back and carry on.

Support older children to use independent tools for their own skill development

Help your older children to access independent tools, including reflection activities and interactive modules, to build their own essential skills.

Build your child's essential skills in three steps

Read

Read and learn more about the skill together.

Talk

Talk about the skill with your child using suggested questions and discussion ideas.

Do

Do a skill based activity together at home, at a time and pace to suit you.

Free for parents, carers and families.

Go to skillsbuilder.org/homezone to start building your child's essential skills today!